The Year In Epidemiology 2016

Our 2016 calendar of key events taking place in Epidemiology next year contains 138 listings. As usual, it contains a wide variety of offerings, including numerous short courses, a variety of summer programs, online courses and multiple meetings for professional organizations of epidemiologists and public health professionals. Listings are for national and international events.

Use the signup form at http://www.epimonitor.net/Events.htm about including a free listing of your event if it is not already published here. It will be added to the 2016 calendar on our website and featured in our EpiGram email alerts to all subscribers.

In late June 2016, there will take place the 4th Congress of Epidemiology in Miami Florida sponsored by multiple epidemiology professional associations meeting jointly at that time. Other notable events coming up during the year include a meeting to learn from the West African Ebola outbreak and a workshop on Big Data.

Review the entire calendar issue to read about the full variety of upcoming events.

Exciting Opportunity for a Mid-Career Faculty Position in Biostatistics

Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis, among the world’s premier health research institutions, is committed to advancing human health. As noted leaders in patient care, research, and education, our outstanding faculty have contributed many discoveries and innovations to science and medicine.

The Division of Biostatistics at Washington University School of Medicine, in collaboration with the Institute for Clinical and Translational Sciences (ICTS), invites applications for a mid-career faculty position in Biostatistics. Rank is commensurate with experience. The successful candidate will join a highly productive Biostatistics Division that plays critical roles in supporting several centers and institutes at the forefront of research in clinical and translational sciences. The Division of Biostatistics faculty conduct cutting-edge research in statistical sciences as applied to a range of biomedical and genomic projects including observational studies, clinical trials, and statistical genetics. It also offers a growing graduate training program in biostatistics.

The mid-career faculty position offers an excellent opportunity for individuals with leadership capabilities and a commitment to excellence, innovation, and originality combined with the desire to engage in cutting-edge research on statistical methods and their application in health sciences. Candidates with extensive experience in observational studies and clinical trials would be preferred.

Applicants must have a PhD in biostatistics, statistics, or a related field in quantitative sciences with an exceptional track record of collaborative research and a commitment to supporting/leading collaborations in diverse areas of clinical and translational research. Additional expectations include: a strong record of collaborative publications as well as some substantive ones demonstrating academic excellence; some experience with grant writing; serving in a leadership capacity on collaborative grants (preferably as a Multiple PI or playing key roles which used to be recognized as “Co-PI”); excellent skills in statistical consulting and communication including experience in pre-award statistical consulting; some leadership experience in leading Biostatistics Core facilities is desirable; and a passion for teaching and mentoring graduate students and junior faculty. The ideal candidate will have strong leadership characteristics to guide and contribute to the growth and success of the Division and be willing to serve on various academic activities and committees. Leadership opportunities exist.

We strongly encourage women and underrepresented minorities to apply. Washington University is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer. Interested candidates are encouraged to apply by January 15, 2016 with a statement of research interests, CV, and three letters of recommendation to: Biostatistics Search Committee, Division of Biostatistics, Washington University School of Medicine, 660 South Euclid, Campus Box 8967, St. Louis, MO 63110-1093. Application materials may also be e-mailed to facultysearch@wubios.wustl.edu.
